YOUR HEALTH
By Dr. Morris Fishbein

A Utah mother writes me that she finds this column very helpful and that she is greatly disturbed by a problem which she has not seen frequently discussed.

It seems she has a son who is short for his age and weight. The father is six feet tall; the mother five feet, four and one-half inches tall.

Now, all the neighbor children are slightly taller and weigh more than this boy, and he is becoming self-conscious about it. The mother thinks maybe his thyroid is at fault.

I have frequently pointed out that the height and weight of children vary a good deal according to the races from which they spring. Heights vary also in various classes in the community. New-born children among the well-to-do usually are taller and heavier than those of the poor.

College students in general are slightly taller and weigh more than the laborers as a class. This is believed to be due to the fact that they eat better and live under better conditions of hygiene.

Growth of the child in length varies at different periods. At birth a baby is about 20 inches long. The length increases 50 per cent in the first year, doubles by the fourth year, and triples by the 14th. When grown, the person is about 3 1/2 times the height at birth if nothing has interfered with growth in length.

Short children usually become short adults, and tall children usually become tall adults. Tall children grow rapidly during the period of 10 to 11 years of age, while short children do not make this spurt until 12 or 13 years of age.

Girls who are big for their age are likely to slow up in their rate of growth one or two years earlier than girls who are small for their age.

Most parents fail to watch carefully the rate of growth of their children. For that reason changes will occur which the parents will fail to recognize. The X-ray pictures will show that during severe periods of illness growth in the long bones temporarily stops.

Sometimes glands which affect growth cease to function satisfactorily. This definitely will affect the height of the child. For instance, a failure of the pituitary gland to function during the first three years of life will have a much greater effect on the size of the person than a beginning failure of this function in the 13th or 14th year of life.

This is simply because one-half the normal height of the individual is acquired during the first three years of his life.

Parents should measure the height and weight of their children at regular intervals so they will know whether the child is growing steadily in height and weight, as it should if it is a normal child. If, for any reason, this does not seem to take place, a competent doctor should be consulted as soon as possible.

Your Children
By Olive Roberts Barton

The other day a little boy was looking through a magazine and saw the picture of a burning ocean liner plunging head-first into the depths. From the vessel steel people were jumping into the sea. Small boats were rescuing a few, but the picture was a graphic one of hopeless tragedy.

This small boy is sensitive, but not a coward. He is a born philosopher and knows much about this unsafe world. Yet, in spite of the fact that he brought the book to his mother and was told that boats were much safer today, he went to bed and woke up screaming that the boat was going down and he was burning.

Shock Soon Forgotten

The mother asked me what to do. I said, "Nothing." There was no real shock connected with the picture, nothing that affected the child personally, and therefore, like everything else he must see and hear in his childhood, this incident will lose outline shortly and therefore its horror. But if he were to see such a picture every day then the idea of safety on all boats would be undermined and the obsession might deepen.

The book was destroyed, the subject dropped and there has been no nightmare since. And his sensible mother said, "I think he has been having too much to eat in the evening. I've let him have more than just his cereal and egg and fruit. And I notice that he is talking less in his sleep or tossing half the night."

Which is sensible, whether the dreams come from an upset stomach or not.

But about this matter of terror. What is to be done when the family try their best to protect the little child from sights and experiences that leave a mark on memory? He can't be shut in a tower and feel safe in his eternal clouds. He has to know that dogs get run-over, and people, too, that houses burn and ships sometimes sink. He has to discover a certain amount of villainy in the human race, too, and that there are people who steal and even kill.

The big question is, "When will it be safe for him to realize tragedy?"

Should Learn Gradually

Here we split on theory. Much has been written about the wisdom of acquainting children with death, for instance, from their earliest years, so they do not establish a sense of security that is a double shock when blasted. On the other hand, we must heed the frequent cases of resulting emotional instability from one unfortunate experience. We must, therefore, do the best we can. And that best, I think, is to keep tragedy from touching the little child personally when possible, but to get him gradually accustomed to the world as it is, through experience.

He will learn that life is insecure. I don't think it hurts him. Indeed, it may increase his defense. All of us must become insured to the fate of others in a certain degree. If we don't, and rode our sensitive sympathies every second, we would become quivering pulps of jelly. Just as sympathy is bad for us, both on the giving and receiving end, I think much shielding of the child unwise. He lives in a dangerous age and needs a certain hardening to face real life. He usually adjusts his outlook himself, with a normal mixture of sympathy and philosophy. Time does wonders.

Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD.—Gladys George was the comedienne in "The Milky Way" on the New York stage, but she wasn't considered for the movie made from that play. She was the comedy star of "Personal Appearance," behind the footlights for 33 weeks, but nobody thought of her for the screen until "Personal Appearance" got around to thinking about Miss George, she was put into the intense and lugubrious principal role of "Valiant Is the World for Carrie."

A Tear-Jerker

But if anybody in talkies considered this a masterpiece of miscasting, he was mistaken. For Miss George is a player of intense and lugubrious roles from away back.

She has played 'em from Boston to Honolulu, and from Nina Weston in "Strange Interlude" to Sadie Thompson in "Rain." She has worked more years in her time than you could shake a map at.

She went on the stage at 5, and for a few years was seen in sad-little-boy parts, including "Little Lord Fauntleroy." She played in vaudeville. At 17 word for this particular Carrie, because she stepped right from stage to studio, after 35 weeks' steady work, and began a 49-day shooting schedule. Ward went around that Miss George, who was on the verge of a breakdown, and wasn't at, he interviewed, or even watched.

Fact was that Miss George, a congenial soul with nothing of the Garbo about her, would have welcomed visitors. It was Director Wesley Ruggles who didn't want people around. He can't stand gawking, whispering, snickering, pin-dropping, yawning, or knuckle-cracking on the set. Socially, he is all right.

While her professional life was so closely cloistered, Miss George found she had no private life at all. It's the scariest thing of all, the screwy things about Hollywood," she said, "and I can't get used to it."

New Idea on Parties

"I used to have the quaint idea that parties were given for the purpose of getting a gang of friends around and having fun. Hollywood parties are given for publicity. If you mention anything more controversial than the weather, you're quoted in the gossip columns next day.

"There are more photographers than there are guests, and you must pretend not to notice the cameras that keep popping at you every other minute.

"So I don't like Hollywood parties. The best time I have had here was when I went to the amusement pier at Venice and ate hot dogs and got slimed in the funhouse.

"Of course there were a few hundred thousand people there, but it was the first chance I've had to kind of let my hair down and be myself for a change."

BEGIN HERE TODAY

JUDITH HOWARD, engaged to STEPHEN FOWLER for four years, breaks the engagement because Stephen is unwilling to marry her and let her continue with her job. Judith is encouraged in this move by her friend, Virginia Bent.

Lonely and unhappy, Judith goes for a walk and steps in front of an approaching automobile. The driver avoids hitting her, the driver swerves and strikes a fire hydrant. She is injured and taken to a hospital. Judith, feeling responsible, goes along young DR. EDEN HARRIS tells her the doctor's injuries are not serious. Later Dr. Harris takes Judith home. In a burst of confidence she tells him about her broken engagement.

Judith keeps that Steve has recently landed a big contract and bought a new car. She has a telephone call from him and he asks her to renew the engagement. Judith promises to consider this.

Next day Virginia comes to her with a newspaper. "You may as well see this now," Virginia says.

NOW GO ON WITH THIS STORY

CHAPTER XI

JUDITH looked at the headlines which Virginia Bent spread before her:

POLITICAL SCANDAL INVOLVES NORTH END PIPE LINE CO.

At first glance she did not see the significance of the news story to which Virginia pointed. Then suddenly, with a catch in her throat, she remembered that this was the deal in which Steve had been engaged.

"It's quite a mess," she heard Virginia saying. "And they've indicted Steve."

Judith dropped the newspaper to her desk. "But how can they? All he did was sell them the pipe."

"I don't know how they can, darling. All I know is that they have. Of course I'm not saying he's guilty—and nothing's been proved yet except that somebody in the city hall made money on the deal."

"Virgie, will you tell Mr. Borden I can't be here this afternoon?"

"Where are you going?"

Judith faced her friend resolutely. "I'm going to Steve, of course."

With that she left the speechless Virginia. Downstairs she hailed a taxi and was taken to the office of Steve's company, resolved to talk with Steve's boss before she went to Steve himself. In her excitement she had forgotten that it was the noon hour, and she found the place almost deserted—except for STEPHEN FOWLER! At the far end of the big room he sat at one of the salesmen's desks, his head in his hands, oblivious to her approach.

"Steve..." she said softly.

He looked up suddenly. "Judith! What are you doing here?"

"Then you haven't been—been arrested?"

He smiled weakly. "Oh, sure, I'm in the hoosegow theoretically. But the boss put up bail."

"Steve... there's nothing to all this, is there? I mean, all you did was take the order, and they can't..."

"Just a minute, Judith. There is something to it. More than even the boss knows. I didn't take any money on the deal, but I did know that somebody in the engineering department was going to make a profit at the expense of city taxpayers."

"That doesn't sound like you, Stephen."

He did not answer at once, just looked at her coldly. "No," he said. "I guess it doesn't. But you can't have everything, you know. You can't have ideals and the girl you want, too. I had to put that deal over, Judith, and you know why I closed one eye."

Without another word, Judith turned and left him. But she wasn't finished. Here she had reached the street again she had her plan in mind. Steve Fowler was in trouble because he loved her, Judith told herself, and she must help him. At a drug store on the corner of the block she telephoned Bob Bent.

"This is Judith, Bob. You've seen the newspapers?"

"You mean about Steve, I suppose? Yes, I saw them."

"We must do something, Bob. You've got to help me."

"THERE'S nothing much we can do," Bob Bent told her. "I phoned Steve this morning, and he told me his boss was taking charge of things."

"But, Bob, I don't want to depend on just that. I feel sure if we—we got a lawyer for Steve?"

"How do you know Steve will fancy our mixing up in this?"

"I don't care about that," rejoined Judith impatiently. "Bob, if you've ever been a friend of mine—"

"All right, Judith. I'll get in touch with John Grose and have him go down and talk to Steve at least."

"Thanks, Bob..."

Just before closing time Judith was called to the telephone. Taking up the receiver, she heard Ed Harris' cheery voice at the other end of the wire.

"Would you be willing to try dinner with me again?"

Judith hesitated. Certainly she did not feel much like dining out, and yet she disliked to say "no" to this friendly voice. "Why, yes," she managed at last.

At 5 o'clock his car was in front of the office building. He ran to join Judith the moment she appeared in the entrance way.

"Would you like to go to my club for a cocktail before we eat?" he asked, assisting her into the car.

"I think I could stand just one," Judith told him.

The tiny "ladies bar" of Eden's club was quiet and restful. Judith liked the soothing pastel-green walls, the quaint old-fashioned prints, and the little knee-high chairs. Contentedly she turned the rim of her cocktail glass in her fingers, lounged deep in the comfortable chair. "This is nice," she told Eden.

HIS face brightened. "If you really like it, Judith, I'm going to ask you a question. Because," he added with a smile, "I've been meaning to ask it a long time now." Judith did not answer, and Eden said, "I want you to marry me, Judith."

Judith set down her glass with trembling fingers, still wordless. Eden hurried on: "I don't mean now or tomorrow or next week. The very next minute would be all right with me, Judith. But..."

For the first time since she had known him he seemed flustered, as ill at ease as a boy. "I thought I'd give you fair warning."

Judith met his eyes squarely. "I like you a great deal, Eden, but..."

"Oh, I know it's all backwards. I haven't kissed you. We haven't held hands in the movies or strolled in the moonlight. But I love you, Judith. That's what I want you to know."

Suddenly Judith leaned toward him, took his face in her cool hands and kissed him full upon the lips. It was an impulsive, involuntary move, and she stood up with her face crimson. "You're the nicest person I've ever known," she said slowly.

Eden smiled bitterly. "But you don't love me?"

"I—I don't know, Eden. I couldn't give you an answer now. You see," she met his quizzical gaze. "You see, Steve's in trouble." He nodded. "Oh, yes. There's Steve. I was optimistic enough to think that perhaps there wasn't... now."

"But it's not a question of that," Judith insisted. "He—he's really in trouble because of me. And—and we were together so long, Eden."

Wearily Eden drained his glass, set it down firmly on the little table. When he faced Judith again he was smiling. "Shall we have dinner now?" He touched her arm as impersonally as though he had never, a moment before, professed his love for her. "And shall we try John's Rendezvous again, or do you think it might be bad luck?"

All the way to the restaurant he talked glibly of insignificant things, but beneath the brittle surface of his gaiety there was an undercurrent of despair he could not hide from Judith.

LETTERS to the Editor

The School in Fourth Ward

Editor The Star: We have been informed that they are only going to use the Oglesby school for the Fourth and Fifth grades. And all the children living in the Fourth Ward from North Hazel street from the first to third grades will have to go to the Paisley school.

Several years ago when I was on the School Board with Dr. Cannon, Oglesby and John Robinson, we bought the Catholic school now known as the Brookwood school, moved the high school to the Garland and bought the lots where the Paisley school now stands.

When they moved the high school we insisted that they put in a room to take care of the small children and made plans for building the building in the Fourth Ward so that the small children would not have to go so far to school in the Second Ward. In other words we located the four schools as best we could in the interest of the beginners of school. There were several small children that had been out of school last year on account of the distance and danger of children crossing these streets and highways in order to get to school.

School law, as I understand it, is primarily for the common, and, if we have means enough, to run a high school ALL RIGHT. Most of the professors and teachers have autos to ride in and the school board has been diverting money for the last several years that belongs to the common.

If the school board would cut down on some of the overhead expenses in the high school and put a teacher in one of the rooms of the Oglesby school, it will be a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction to the people of the Fourth Ward. We are taxpayers over here in the Fourth Ward and are interested in seeing our small children having an opportunity in life and get started, and most of us do not have a convenient way of carrying our children to school. So far we have been fortunate in not getting any of our children injured.

You have only to look on the map of the City of Hope and see if you would be willing for your 6-year-old child to start in school when we have a building built on purpose for that purpose in this Fourth Ward. Would it not be better to have the teachers to walk to the school room, if necessary, than to have one child to walk the distance to the Paisley school? With all good will to the school board, one or more of you have children of this age. And I would like for you to consider this matter and save us any further trouble in taking this up over your heads. All that we want is what is just, reasonable and right.

In other words the Fourth Ward is entitled to have a place in the Oglesby School to start out the younger children in their school work and we feel it is your duty as School Directors to see that we have the benefits of the building mentioned. If necessary let the older children do the walking but not our babies.

PAST MEMBER OF THE SCHOOL BOARD.

Englishman Reports on His Tour of Tombs Prison in New York

LONDON.—(AP)—Returning from a visit to the United States, former Lord Mayor Benno Perin, of Hull, said American criminals were the best dressed in the world.

Escorted through the Tombs prison in New York, through the courtesy of Mayor LeGuardia, Pearlman said he witnessed one of the police "shadow box" lineups in which he saw prisoners dressed in the height of fashion.

"Some of them looked as if they might have stepped out of an English university or a Saville-row tailor shop in London," he said.

While inspecting the rogues' gallery, Pearlman said, he was particularly struck by the number of men who posed as clergymen in operating confidence tricksters.

"The police system in America has few equals anywhere," he said, "and I was pleased to note that it is based on the system at Scotland Yard."

I might wish the world were better,
I might sit around and sigh
For a water that is better
And a bluer sort of sky.
There are times I think the weather
Could be much improved upon,
But when taken altogether
It's a good old world we're on.
I might wish that men were kinder,
And less eager after gold;
I might wish that they were blinder
To the faults they now behold.
And I'd try to make them gentler,
And more tolerant in strife
And a bit more sentimental
Over the finer things of life.
Here's a world that suffers sorrow,
Here are bitterness and pain,
And the joy we plan tomorrow
May be ruined by the rain.
Here are hate and greed and badness,
Here are love and friendship, too,
But the most of it is gladness
When at last we've run it through.
Could we only understand it,
As we shall some distant day,
We shall see that he who planned it
Know our needs along the way.

Sunday School Has Picnic, Fair Park

300 Attend Tabernacle Sunday School Event in Local Park Monday

The Hope Gospel Tabernacle Sunday school held its first annual Sunday school picnic Monday at Fair park with approximately 300 in attendance.

The Sunday school attendance has grown from about 60 to the present number in the last few months. Ice cream, lemonade, sack races, watermelon eating contest and a ball game preceded by a devotional service at 10:30 and a sumptuous picnic dinner at noon made the picnic a real success from every angle.

Last Sunday closed a four-weeks contest in the Tabernacle Sunday school and in appreciation of the splendid work of the entire congregation Pastor and Mrs. Webb presented a large oil painting to the church, showing the well known scene of Christ praying in the Garden. The picture is the work of an artist in Tulsa, Okla., a Mr. Little, who is famous for his fine reproductions of this popular masterpiece.

After the presentation of the painting, the largest crowd in the history of the Tabernacle, to attend a regular service, heard the pastor deliver a sermon entitled, "No Silver No Gold."

be. I'm no actor—I mean, not a technical actor.

"There are parts I couldn't play if I rehearsed for years. I couldn't be a hand-kissing, continental type of guy. The parts I have, I must feel. And maybe people like me because they know I'm a pretty normal kind of pretty ordinary American."

Hollywood's private opinion of Taylor is a pretty good index of his short life in the film capital. There are people who regard him as high-hat because he has resisted efforts to adopt him into the loftier social circles.

They wouldn't mind if Taylor wanted to put on an act of Garboesque temperament, but they're stung by the obvious fact that he just doesn't care much for the colony's way of amusing itself. Hollywood can't bear to be taken casually.

Confused by acclaim
A good many months ago Taylor admitted to this correspondent that he was having quite a struggle to keep his balance in the face of his amazing fan acclaim. He explained that there were so many things a young actor was obliged to live up to. He had to live and dress and play according to a set of rules.

Robert Taylor... most adulated movie idol since Valentino.

He said, "I've tried to do what was expected of me. I've met the 'right people' and have been—at least once—to all the 'right places'."

Today, an established star, Taylor can do just about as he pleases. "That's a relief," he said, "but, of course, there are still some restrictions—new ones. I can't go out in public as I'd like to do—like driving down to an amusement pier and riding the roller-coaster."

He likes to drive his cars, play tennis with other motion picture people at the Beverly Hills Tennis Club and dance. Really dance, not just mill around on the jammed, postage-stamp floor of a smoky night club.

Taylor and Barbara Stanwyck sometimes go to the Palomar, a huge public ballroom in Los Angeles. Admirers mob the pair as they enter, but pay them a more sincere tribute by leaving them alone during the remainder of the evening.

They know that the stars have come there to enjoy themselves and not to be pestered for autographs.

Resigned by Fans
On the streets, though, or in amusement parks, stores, and even restaurants clamoring fans trail his every step. Taylor never gets angry, openly, he's apologetic when he has to decline more signatures and begs permission to be allowed to go on his way.

He never entertains at his house. He has few close friends, and devotes most of his spare time to his mother and Miss Stanwyck. Hollywood is in quite a dither over the romance, but is making no bets on what will come of it.

After all, Taylor's name has been linked by gossip with a succession of screen beauties. He has appeared before the camera with an impressive number of stars—Virginia Bruce, Irene Dunne, Miss Stanwyck, Janet Gaynor, Loretta Young, Joan Crawford—and now, in "Carnegie," with Greta Garbo.

He hasn't much to say about his work with Miss Garbo. "It's a job, that's all—just making a picture. Tension? Why, no; what's the use of getting nervous?"

Victims in Coast Fiend Slayings

The brutal attack-slaying of Miss Ruth Muir, 48, daughter of a San Antonio, Tex., banker, on the beach at La Jolla, Calif., recalled five other fiendish murders in the San Diego vicinity, none of which ever has been solved. On April 19, 1931, the bruised, nearly nude body of Louise Feuler, 17 (1), was found hanging from a tree in the Black Mountain, 30 miles from San Diego. On May 3, the same year, Hazel Bradshaw, 23 (2), telephone operator, was stabbed to death in San Diego. Ten days before, April 23, the body of Mrs. W. B. Bibbings, 32 (3), had been discovered in her flat, she had been strangled to death with a towel. Sixteen-year-old Celia Cota (4) was found, on Aug. 18, 1934, assaulted and strangled, in the back yard of her home. The series of murders had opened with the discovery, on March 10, 1931, of the mutilated head and torso of Virginia Brooks, 10 (5), wrapped in a sack on a plain seven miles from San Diego.

Glamorous Evening Dress for Winter

Broadcloth, Lace and Chiffon Appear in Paris Fashion Show

PARIS. — (AP) — Glamorous evening clothes were launched for winter parties when Paris designers displayed their August-born collections here. Gold spangled broadcloth, jet trimmed lace, chiffon patterned with gold kid, tulle accented with black felt, glistening paillettes, sparkling stonies, beads and bugles, lent their individual accents to high light the whole. Mosaics of colored velvets were set in gold embroideries to make corselet belts. Feathers went into fans, head-dresses and shoulder decoration. Rain-brown colored scarfs isolated from shoulders or fell in double or triple trains to the ground. As many flowers were used for these winter models as for the spring ones.

Skirts Reveal Trousers
The warm glint of metal ran through rich fabrics. Stiff moires, heavy ottomans, cloques, velvets, broadcloths, were tinsel shot or patterned. Glistening white and black satins, changeable failles and taffetas, clinging crepes, added their bit of glamor. Trousers and petticoated models were seen. Ardanne showed evening skirts slashed up around the hem, revealing chiffon petticoats or satin trousers underneath. Some evening dresses opened down the front in coat style, over straight petticoats of self or contrasting material.

Two-piece evening frocks sounded a new note. One had a slim black skirt and a belted white blouse entirely covered with bugle beads. Molyneux showed a black taffeta evening blouse with a peplum flared out widely over a black velvet skirt. His two-piece frocks also struck a modern note. One had a velvet front and a lace back, another a broadcloth front with taffeta back.

Color Gives Accent
Color accented puny a white or black evening model. Lelong's vaporous scarfs in several colors formed trains one moment and draped the shoulders the next. He underscored a white brocade dress with a yellow and green girdle repeating the note of yellow flowers and green leaves on the bodice.

Disks of black felt and oblongs of gold kid were used by Lanvin in novel appliques on sheer stuffs. She also used scarf-like drapelets on skirts, letting them fall in long loops from the bodice.

Theus to Preach Final on Tuesday

"Death" to Be His Subject at Nazarene Revival Service Here

"Ye Are Not Your Own," was the topic of a sermon delivered Monday night by the Rev. Harold C. Theus at the Nazarene revival meeting.

"You are not your own, but a creation of God. You belong to Him; secondly because of preservation, and third because He purchased you with His blood."

The Rev. Mr. Herrell was in charge of the music and brought a special number in song.

The Rev. Mr. Theus preaches his last sermon here Wednesday night on "Death." The Rev. Mr. Herrell will carry on throughout the week and will preach morning and night. The public is invited.

Stamp News

By I. S. Klein

SOME Harvard enthusiasts still have hopes that a special stamp will be issued soon commemorating the 300th anniversary of the founding of that famous university. They believe that President Roosevelt, a Harvard graduate, will approve such an issue. But officially there is the fear this would set a bad precedent.

The souvenir sheet of four commemorative stamps printed in connection with the international stamp exposition in New York, recently, already has been withdrawn from sale at the Philatelic Agency.

Stamps still available at the agency in Washington, and worth picking up before they are withdrawn, include the all-blue 16-cent airmail special delivery, the 10, 15, and 20-cent airmails, the one-cent and three-cent Chicago World's Fair stamps in sheets of 25 each, and the two-cent experimental electric eye stamp, which is sold only in sheets of 100.

New Zealand soon will issue a set of five stamps commemorating the World Industrial Conference in Wellington. The stamps will be on sale for the month of October only. They total 28 cents in face value, and picture New Zealand's important industries.

Denmark has issued a set of four values, in two designs, for the 400th anniversary of the Reformation in that country.

A sort of tax stamp, to provide funds for national defense, has appeared in Ecuador. Its use is compulsory on all legal papers, as well as on parcel post and registered mail.

Dean's Followers Overlook Hubbell

Giant's Left-Hander Best
on That Club Since
Christy Mathewson

By PAP
Associated Press Writer
A sure-fire baseball argument—one that never fails to provoke a red hot debate—is the discussion of the relative merits of Dizzy Dean and Carl Hubbell. Each has his own staunch supporters who are ever ready to quote facts and figures to prove their contentions.

There is no questioning the fact that Dean and Hubbell are the two outstanding mountsmen in the National league. They are great pitchers. You can take your choice and come close to being correct. So why not name Dean the king-pin of the right-handed tossers and Hubbell the daddy of the southpaws? There ought to be honors enough for both.

They are different types—the long, loud-talking Dean, and the quiet, self-effacing Hubbell. They go about achieving great results on the mound in different fashion. Old Diz likes to "fog 'em" past the batters, while King Carl uses more subtle means of outsmarting the enemy. It all depends on the type of workman you prefer.

They Don't Rout Hubbell
There is one thing to be said about Hubbell. He is the steadiest piece of pitching mechanism of the current campaign. No team has been able to ride rough-shod over the Giant left-hander this season. The same cannot be said of Dean. Dizzy has been subjected to several route—occasions when he looked like anything but the pitcher of the decade which his followers insist he is. Of the six defeats charged to Hubbell this season, four have been by the margin of a single run.

Hubbell has not been blessed with the advantage of the hard-hitting, run-getting supporting cast that Dean has enjoyed most of the current season. This is borne out by the records which show that 10 of Hubbell's triumphs have been achieved by one-run differences.

In temperament, Dean and Hubbell are as far apart as the poles. The even-tempered Hubbell has as fine a baseball temperament as any big-league pitcher ever had. He is the same under any circumstances. With no fuss or fireworks Carl goes about his pitching chores with determination and deliberation. Temperamental outbursts have no place in his scheme of things.

Gets Tough Job
Hubbell, on September 1, had scored 164 victories for the Giants since he donned the New York uniform in the summer of 1928. Ninety-four defeats were charged against him in that time. He is rated the greatest Giant pitcher since Christy Mathewson, and is, very likely, the greatest left-hander the Giants ever had.

That last statement covers a lot of territory for Giant rosters of the past have boasted some outstanding southpaws in Art Nehf, Rube Marquard and George Wiltse. Marquard ran up a string of 19 victories one season for the Giants. But the Rube lacked Hubbell's steadiness over a stretch. Many times Marquard blew up to the skies.

Carl always has been a great team player. He is ever ready to step in and save a game. He willingly pitches in or out of turn and does whatever his manager asks. There have been few soft spots picked out for him. In most cases he draws the tough assignments, where his mound opponent is laboring to hang up a victory which would enhance his reputation. Hubbell's record is all the greater for the way it has been achieved.

Track Fugitive Killers With Radio

Instead of baying bloodhounds, portable radio sets played an important role in this modern man hunt, in the wild mountain country near Yicko, Calif., where hundreds of heavily armed men sought two half-breed Indian brothers, John and Coke Bright, charged with slaying three men. Two members of the posse are shown tuning in on others, to keep the search organized. The fugitives were alleged to have shot to death two peace officers and a port captain who sought to serve an assault warrant on them.

Dickey and Gehrig Yanks' Sparkplugs

Catcher and First Baseman Rank With Greatest of All Time

By PAP
Associated Press Writer
You don't hear very much about Bill Dickey, New York Yankee catcher—what with Lou Gehrig making threatening gestures toward Babe Ruth's record of 60 homers and having just about the best year of his long career, and Rookie Joe DiMaggio performing in sensational style. But, day after day, Dickey dons his cumbersome regalia and squats behind the plate to give the Yankees A-No. 1 catching.

And that's not all. Sweet William contributes his share towards making the Yankees the steam-roller of the American league. His batting average, in the neighborhood of .365, is all the more impressive when you note that Dickey has driven more than 100 runs across the plate for the Yankees. Most of them came when they count the

30 Rounds Boxing on Card Tuesday

Feature Bout Will Pit Panama Kid Against Kid Bufkin, Shreveport

Thirty rounds of boxing and a battle royal are scheduled on Tuesday night's fight card at the South Walnut street arena.

The feature event is a five-round battle between "Panama Kid" and "Kid" Bufkin of Shreveport. Both are negroes with several years of fighting experience.

Clyde Davis meets "Fat" Ward in the semi-final, scheduled for four rounds. Seven preliminary fights are as follows:

"Cat" Cannon vs. an unnamed negro of Spring Hill in a three-round scrap.

D. K. Carson vs. Leo Dunlap, three rounds. Both are negroes.

Phoney White vs. "Jug Head," three rounds. Both are negroes.

"Pink" Carrigan vs. Roscoe Green, three rounds. Carrigan won over the negro Green in a close battle last week.

Doyle Arnold, Alton CCC recruit, vs. Ota Martin, three rounds.

"Kid" Blackie vs. Johnny Phillips, three rounds. They are negroes.

Coy Darr and Thurman Lefevres of the Alton CCC camp meet in a scheduled three-round fight.

most—in the pinches. His home run total of 21 in less than 100 games is not to be sneezed at, even though some of his teammates far outstrip him in this specialty.

Dickey came to the Yankees late in 1928 and took part in 10 games. The following season he took over the job of first-string catcher and worked in 130 games. Since then he has never failed to catch over 100 games each season. And with the 100-odd games he will add to the list this year the "30" season brings his string up to eight in a row in which he has worked in more than 100 contests.

Bill is 29 and should have several good years left in his system. His present pace, at least, give no indication that he is slowing up. He stands an excellent chance of matching Ray Schalk's record of catching 100 or more games for 11 successive seasons.

Lou Helps the Enemy
As busy as he is piling up records this season, Lou Gehrig is not too busy to take time out and give an ambitious youngster some advice. When Chubby Dean of the Philadelphia Athletics, on the suggestion of Connie Mack, approached Gehrig in Shibe park the veteran slugger not only took time out to show the youngster a few tricks in the art of covering first base, but continued to coach Dean all through the opening contest of the double-header.

It was an odd sight to see Gehrig pointing out Dean's mistakes and offering suggestions as they changed positions at the end of each inning. The home crowd appreciated Gehrig's generosity and cheered him lustily.

The suggestion of Mack's was just another of the many compliments the veteran manager has paid the Yankees' durable first-baseman from time to time. Old Connie has seen them all and he does not hesitate to single out Gehrig as the greatest first-baseman in history. And there is plenty of foundation for Mack to base that be-

TUNA BY TON, NOT CAN

First setting a new world record for women in landing the 600-pound tuna at left in Jordan's Bay, Nova Scotia, Mrs. Francis Low, above, followed that feat by landing the 749-pounder in the center for a new world record for either sex. lief on, too.

Di Maggio Takes Ruth's Place
Joe Di Maggio has fairly well satisfied the most exacting fan that he is a real ball player. His consistent play showed him to be all the enthusiastic experts on the Pacific coast painted him. That he has been able to convince the skeptics has pleased the Little Bambino no end. Particularly has it been gratifying to him to be able to make Rogers Hornsby eat some words he uttered early in the season.

The Browns manager said that while he was willing to admit that Di Maggio was more than an ordinary rookie, he was not so sure but that he could be held at bay with intelligent pitching. Perhaps the Browns have not been able to furnish the particular type of pitching Hornsby had in mind, for they have not been able to stop Joe as yet.

Di Maggio's answer to Hornsby is the close to .600 average he has piled up against St. Louis pitching. His .340 average, as well as the 25 home runs he has hit off the combined American league pitchers, would indicate that the hurriers have not discovered any great weakness in his act with the willow.

Di Maggio has done his share to pep up the Yankees. Last year the Yankees were without Ruth in the lineup for the first time and they suffered a letdown. This season, thanks to Di Maggio, they look like the Yankees of old—and are thumping the ball in the fashion that won them pennants in the past.

Failure to "See" Bomber, Fortunate

Up to State Office If Officers of Kane "Recognized" Plane

By PRESTON GROVER
Associated Press Correspondent
WASHINGTON. — Three times a Spanish plane swooped over the United States destroyer Kane, dropping bombs. The Kane whipped the covers off an anti-aircraft gun and fired nine rounds after the plane, spinning the shells at the craft as it approached, and after it left.

Reporting the incident, the state department said officers on the Kane did not identify the plane, so warnings were sent both to the Madrid government and the rebels telling them to keep their bombers away from American ships.

It was scarcely to be wondered that rumors rippled about Washington that the state department knew exactly which side owned the plane that dropped bombs at the Kane.

Difficult Situation
A difficult situation was involved. The state department is striving to preserve not only neutrality in actual dealings with the two Spanish factions, but is equally anxious that American public sentiment remain neutral.

It was hard for Washington onlookers with even a smattering of military knowledge to understand how the officers of the Kane could have watched the plane on three separate visits, could train destroyer guns upon it, and yet be unable to identify it.

If the officers did not recognize the plane, then it seemed a lucky break

The Dutch Indies are rich in many resources, most notably hemp and oil. These island possessions of the tiny little European kingdom stretch over a zone as extensive as from Seattle to New York, with an enormous coast line to defend in case of attack.

In years past, American munitions makers have found no great market there. Even as late as last February orders amounted to $10. In the next three months it has a little over $10,000.

But June brought orders for $146,702 in munitions, including planes, bombs, machine guns and mines. July orders

Drouth Shows New Political Effect

Government Aid Stems Tide of Republicanism in Middle West

By BRYON PRICE
Chief of Bureau, The Associated Press, Washington

Although experts may disagree as to the long-term economic effects of the drouth, its immediate political consequences are plain. It has altered materially the basic strategy of the presidential campaign.

After the national conventions the Republicans were talking in terms of a safely Republican west, and were looking forward to a battle centering chiefly in the east. The Democrats didn't exactly concede anything, but the idea on which they went to work was this: Get enough electoral votes in the east so that it won't matter what happens in the west.

That situation has changed, and one proof of the change comes from no less a Republican authority than National Chairman Hamilton. Mr. Hamilton continues to predict that Landon and Knox will carry the west, but he indicates that it will not be done without a fight. He took note in one of his recent speeches that, on account of the drouth, the west is "in the big" for Roosevelt and Garner.

Ordinarily claims of this kind, on either side, are scarcely news; but this particular one is interesting.

Strategy All Changed
It is a well-established law of politics that there are definite limitations to the political pulling power of such things as benefit checks and relief allotments.

More than once in the past the recipient of bounties from the government has got around eventually to a state of mind where he wonders where it all will end, and whether he is not being put, unnecessarily, into an inferior class of pensioners.

Around convention time many Republicans thought they saw evidences that a large section of the farming community was tiring of the Roosevelt farm policies. Agriculture, in the main, was getting on its feet again. It was listening to Republican charges that the Democratic farm program was all wrong, economically.

But under the blow administered by the drouth, the situation in many places reverted to one of dire necessity again. To many farmers, questions about economics and the distant future paled into insignificance. Their sole worry was whether the money would be sent quickly from Washington.

Mr. Hamilton contends that Washington's response to the call for help was only a matter of course—that the administration only did its plain duty.

Convict Labor in Turkey Is Paid for

Dictator Plans Canal From Sea to Capital on High Plateau

ANKARA, Turkey. — (AP) — Iron-fisted Dictator Kamal Ataturk, the "Grey Eagle of Turkey," believes in hard work—with pay—for his country's convicts. His latest scheme calls for the employment of 6,000 convicts, working twenty gangs of 300 each, on a $1,000,000 engineering feat which will transform lofty Ankara into a seaport. Ataturk's capital is located on heights of the Anatolian plateau, despite its handicap of elevation, more engineering skill will link it to the Black Sea by a wide channel leading to the River Kizilirmak and thence through the tortuous Cukuk to the sea.

The music of "America" also is music of the national anthem of the British Empire, Denmark and Sweden.
